

Inn on the Parking Lot

The Inn on the Parking Lot on the north side of Cumberland St. at #158 (presumably the Victorian houses on the south side of the street were the “parking lot” that had been cleared in preparation for the Bloor St. subway line construction) was opened by Werner Graeber sometime in 1963 with music starting as late as November of that year. Graeber, who at one point owned three coffee shops in Yorkville, was no saint; in and out of court, battling various charges between 1961 and 1965 until he was convicted and jailed for threatening a police officer. Quite the guy! That apparently brought his ownership of the Inn on the Parking Lot at least, to an end. Notably it was one of the first Yorkville coffee houses to bring rock ‘n’ roll or R&B in to replace folk and jazz (see the September through December ‘64 entries below). The “Inn” would become after closing, Charlie Brown’s, home of the Ugly Ducklings.

The Place

The Place also owned by Werner Graeber, was located on the second floor of Mr. Smith's clothing store at 44 Avenue Road. It was open by May 1964 and probably closed around the time the Inn on the Parking Lot closed, in or around February 1965. It appears from the UofT student newspaper The Varsity, to have been a student favourite.

Data collection: As shown, what was available was usually drawn from the three daily newspapers, by accessing the microfilmed archives of the Telegram in the Toronto Reference Library and the digital archives of the Toronto Star and the Globe and Mail. Where I take words directly from a listing I use "quotation marks" and often italics to distinguish those words from other text. Where I cite an article I reference the reporter, if possible.
